Bids Farewell to Republicanism.

PITHY POINTS WELL TOLD.

Great God! Did mortals ever! Why, I'm no hog! I didn't want the whole earth! At least some portion of Africa might have been left certain Ohio county undertrappers—thank heaven they are few—and reeking compounds of arrogance and vulgar bombast, who, dressed in a little brief authority, lost to all those finer sensibilities, have reached a stage of partisan rancor insensible to self-respect and descended to social depths at thought of which our very instincts revolt—left to these mock Cleons who, to carry the colored population solid against "Free Trade England," have been smiting their thighs and howling up and down the hustings as if to blow down the walls of Jericho, for they may be necessary evils and have their loathsome uses.

But this is no time for rhyme or reason. Nothing but lung-sputting shouts of joy can harmonize with the terrific political ecstacy. I recently pointed out to some of the greatest personages appearing in England since Oliver Cromwell, that pre-eminent philanthropist Richard Cobden, whose life was pervaded by so deep a love of humanity, who is the last of all men deserving reproach at the hand of the common people of any land or age, who, when Peel delivered his famous eulogy, said in the House of Commons that which should disarm forever the tongue of calumny—said "I shall leave a name executed by every monopolist, but it may be I shall leave a name sometimes remembered with expressions of good will in those places which are the abode of men whose lot it is to labor and to earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow—a name remembered when they shall recreate their exhausted strength with abundant and untaxed food, all the sweeter because it is no longer leavened by a sense of injustice," who went up from the people of the West to the House of Commons, the dust of the factory yet upon him, with a new doctrine which he had learned at the looms of Manchester and thrice armed with the justice of his cause, revolutionized English economics, fought and won the people's battle and whose glorious and everlasting monument is the sighs and tears of mankind.

But since this promise, though so recent, an event has transpired only so recent in importance to the revolution of '76 and equalled only by a like event in England in 1846, and now I see no reason why a man should keep his promise or do anything else on God's earth but just jump up and yell like a maniac from morning till night, now and then shedding tears of joy and thankfulness for the dawn of this new day. There is no use to argue. This is no time for that. It is only a question of a short time when there will not be a Protectionist left to tell the awful story. There will be a reversal of the whole system of economics. To their surprise, experience will demonstrate that "home markets" and dread of "foreign pauper labor" are sheer delusions and that low prices will mean high wages. The sails of our merchant marine will flock every ocean, the product of our labor will reach every important market on the globe, our factories will run night and day, and agriculture, freed from an infamous and fatal taxation, will send its surplus in homemade bottoms to the very door of India if need be, to rival and route all competition from Europe.

I said in my last letter that the rift in the clouds was the evident fact that Protectionists had abandoned the field as a principle and took refuge in that last ditch of expediency to which Peel and Gladstone had been driven and where they were engulfed by a mighty tidal wave, but this sudden and tragic ending of last Tuesday week was greater, quicker, more terrible and crushing than the wildest imagination ever dreamed. History furnishes many examples of despots in republics. Ours is not an exception, and it is only when the great masses, like the grand convulsions they are, take the reins in their own hands that our institutions are safe. It sometimes takes oppression to make them do this, but when they do, there's the grandest majesty on earth, in comparison with which the mandate of the proudest and most powerful monarch dwindles into puerile insignificance. It is when they thus speak in their majestic that tyrants tremble. Equality is the foundation of liberty, ignorance the principles of servitude. Justice must be the rule of whatever is excellent and great; it is the first of all virtues, and all else without it is ignominious failure.

The people are the sovereigns, not our office-holders, therefore they must be inspired by an ardent love of public good and the highest devotion to the country if the full measure of a republic is to be enjoyed. It is not enough to merely desire to discharge the kindly duties of a citizen of a representative Democracy, but above all, we must know what those duties are, and God bless the wisdom and patriotism of the American people, if they didn't tear away from all bossism and deliver a mandate to the overfatted octopus of greed and hypocrisy in tones that made bones rattle, then the judgment day is going to be a pitiable failure.

My life has extended through an eventful period of our history, and I confess my observation has not been reassuring, but to-day my confidence in the people is restored. Jefferson's theory is again demonstrated and Hamilton's refuted. But I'm growing sentimental. Let me break away from this and halo hurrah for the world.

The thrones of Europe are tottering. Democratic policy has been invited to the most friendly man christian foreign relation. Its tendency is one great common brotherhood. Our example will make these nations still more restive under the yoke and soon they will imitate us. Protection is gone the way of earth, living and dying just as it lived and died in England; birth, life and death identical. As for the Republican party, it is a mere skeleton on cork legs and crutches, ambling away to its grave. Why, as Mark Twain would say, you can fairly see the anguish of despair and death leaping through its ribs. And yet so long as there is a Puritan, Republicanism will have a votary. To him will flock all isms, soreheads and failures, fickle all of the Democratic party, and sooner or later it will rise out of its ashes under some new and misleading name, and contest for supremacy, forever haunting Democracy just as the Puritan has haunted the Cavalier since the Norman conquest. But just now, who cares for a long-haired, cold-blooded, hide-bound whining, canting d-d Puritan, who is as intolerant here as he was when serving the Barebones Parliament, and the courts of Massachusetts in 1637.

Hurrah for Waterson and Taff! Reform!

American Corn Abroad.
(Smokeless Kevring Story.)
The efforts of agents of the Agricultural Department for the introduction of American corn as a breadstuff into the various countries of Europe are likely to result in considerable benefit to the agriculturists of this country. It seems passing strange, but it is nevertheless a fact, that Indian corn as a breadstuff is not used at all in Europe, and in many sections it is not even known. The people will have to be educated to its use just as they were in this country to the use of that delicious vegetable, the tomato, which up to a comparatively few years ago was regarded generally as a thoroughly unwholesome if not poisonous fruit. The efforts of the agents of the department are meeting with encouragement and every promise that success will attend them. Already two mills have been established in Belgium, which will be kept in active operation, using nothing but the American product, and it is said that one of them which has been in operation for some months has had more orders than it can fill. Cornmeal cannot fail to become popular with the masses of people in these European countries when its cheapness, the readiness with which it is made into bread, and its wholesomeness become thoroughly understood. This is one of the purposes of the agents of the Agricultural Department, to instruct the people in the best way of making the bread, and its worth as an article of food. When this is accomplished an immense market will be opened for this product of our cornfields, and great benefits must accrue to our farmers.

DR. TANNER
Expects to Live 150 Years—His Interesting Talk With a Post Reporter—God Furnishes the Best Medicine for Man.

People Will Live a Great Deal Longer If They Eat Less and Fast Occasionally.

(Cincinnati Post.)
Everybody knows Dr. Tanner—the man who deliberately, and of his own free will, fasted longer than it was possible for many to exist without food, and proved his ability to exist on nothing more nourishing than air and water for a period of 40 days.

I met Dr. Tanner at the Indiana Mineral Springs, in Warren county, Ind. He is a fine-looking, hale and hearty old gentleman. His rosy figure and clear complexion indicate the enjoyment of perfect health, and 60 or more years weigh very lightly upon him.

The Doctor's appearance is that of a student and thinker, and a conversation with him reveals the fact that he is a man of more than an ordinary degree of intelligence.

When asked regarding his motive in abstaining from food for 41 days, he said:

"I believed that men could live without food much longer than was commonly supposed, and I desired to demonstrate it. I saw no reason why they should be inferior to the lower animals in this respect. Among the latter there are many remarkable cases of long fasting, notably that of a camel in a menagerie in Chicago, which was stricken with lockjaw, and for a period of 90 days took no food or water. It finally recovered the use of its jaws, and resumed its rations as if nothing had happened. Another case still more remarkable is that of a hog at Dover, England, that was buried beneath a fall of chalk from a cliff and held a prisoner for 140 days, when it was found still alive and able to squeal."

"Do you think it possible to live longer than 40 days without food?" he asked. "I maintain that, with a sufficiency of pure water and plenty of pure air, I can live for 80 days without food."

"What sustains life during these long periods of abstinence, Doctor?"
"When no food is taken the tissues of the body must be used as fuel to keep the machinery in motion. However, this loss need not be great. Under proper conditions I can support life without food at a loss of not more than a fourth of a pound per day."
"Why is it, then, that shipwrecked sailors and persons lost in uninhabited localities perish in a few days?"
"Error hastens their death. Fear kills many people, and is more fatal than disease. Especially is this true in epidemic diseases as cholera."

The Doctor then talked of cholera. He said that while in itself the germ theory of disease is no doubt correct, scientists should go back of this and investigate the conditions that favor the development of these germs. He cited investigations showing that during the great epidemics of cholera there was a notable absence of electricity in the atmosphere, and that when this condition was relieved by thunder showers the spread of the disease was effectually checked. He suggested that when men are able to control the fall of rain they may then remedy these unhealthy conditions by restoring the atmospheric equilibrium, and will then perhaps be able to defy the disease.

Continuing his conversation, the Doctor said: "Doctors and scientific men are too materialistic. In the schools of medicine the researches are not subtle enough. There is that within man that the microscope will not reveal, nor the scalpel bring to light. Doctors should investigate something besides the mere physical structure of man. They should go deeper, and learn more regarding the life force. We will never have a school of medicine worthy the name until physicians study metaphysics as well as physics."

"When men better understand the science of life will they not be enabled to live longer than do at present?" he asked.

"Yes," was the answer. "When people know how to live properly and put their knowledge into practice, they will live much longer and much happier lives."

"Do you consider occasional fasting beneficial?"
"Under certain conditions it is. It removes the old and worn out tissues of the body, and those are afterwards replaced anew; so a man is, as one might say, made over to a certain extent by a long fast."

"How long do you expect to live?"
"I have made the statement," replied the doctor with a smile, "that, with an occasional fast of 40 days, I might live to be a 150 years old. Of course, most persons question this, and I cannot prove it to them at once."

The Doctor is a vegetarian, eating no meat, and confining himself to two meals a day. He says most people eat more than is good for them, and to this attributes much of the poor health of the present time. He is a believer in the relief of human ailments by the use of such remedies as nature has placed at the disposal of all—as earth, air and water. He is an example of the correctness of his theories as applied to himself.

Advice to the Engaged.
(Young Ladies' Friend.)
TO THE MAN.
If you think that a woman is any weaker minded than a man, stop where you are.

If you intend to treat yourself any better than you treat your wife, don't take one.

If you suppose that running the house consists in paying the bills, don't undertake it.

If you have an idea that you are too good for a picked-up dinner, remain a bachelor.

If you have found it a hard task to be happy yourself, don't try to make any one else happy.

If you are marrying her for her figure, it would be wise on your part to watch her diet very closely.

If you have chosen a pretty woman, without regard to her other qualities, halt; you are on the wrong road.

If you incline to the opinion that any man is a good enough for home manners, don't try to have a home.

If you think that a house should have only one head, and that head be yours, postpone your wedding indefinitely.

If you are of the opinion that marriage makes man and wife one, and that you are to be that one, send in your regrets at once.

If you are one of those men who think 10 per cent of their income belongs to the tap-room, in heaven's name let marriage alone.

TO THE WOMAN.
If you are extremely fond of dancing you would do well to marry a dancing-master.

If you are going to marry a man for his looks, you mustn't be surprised when he gives you black eyes.

If you are going into the thing blindly, don't hold up your hands in holy horror when you get your eyes opened.

If you are marrying a man to reform him, it behooves you to exercise all the zeal and patience of the reformer.

If you contemplate taking a husband only in order to gain greater freedom, don't be surprised if he should profit by your example.

If you have been engaged three times before this, you had better wait six months; perhaps this engagement may be followed by still another.

If you have an idea that a cook book and an allowance can make a happy home you should get yourself to a nunnery with all convenient speed.

If you expect that God will bless your home because you put that sentiment in yellow worsted and an oak frame, you are doomed to disappointment.

If you have an idea that married life is any easier than it was in your mother's time because you can live in a boarding-house and put your washing out, don't try it.

If you are fond of dress and show and empty parade and take pleasure in the frivolities of life, don't marry a man at all; merely marry something that will pass for a man.

THE BRITISH OR THE ABORIGINES?

The history of nations is said to be the most interesting and useful of all studies. The successful historian must devote long years to patient research. The climate, geographical position, habits, resources and ancestors are to be considered when one seeks to know of people whose names are forgotten. The religion, the legislation, the literature, the knowledge of fine arts and useful inventions, all afford a fascinating study for the historian. Such labor has met with great reward in our knowledge of most of the peoples of the world. We knew their name, customs, mode of living, rates of marriage and mortality. Indeed there are few civilized countries with which the average reader is not familiar.

But there is a vast wealth of unexplored history hidden in the bosom of the earth of which we can gather as yet, only the outcroppings and which form a rich food for much speculation. Very little is known of the pre-historic races of America. That this country was inhabited ages ago by a people of whom we know nothing, is beyond question. We read of a human skull, found beneath the forests of Florida, which scientists believe to be many thousand years old, and that California has furnished a like specimen of perhaps the same race of people, showing that they were not confined to a small locality, but may have been scattered all over the continent of America. The Western States are full of relics of the cave-dwellers and mound-builders who were doubtless skilled in arts unknown to us. No one knows their origin, and the race is extinct. The western portion of Kentucky is an old, and yet a new and undeveloped country. No one knows who were the occupants beyond the race of Red Men who depicted with Daniel Boone its beautiful hunting grounds. In Ohio country, four miles West of Hartford, its county seat, can be found the ruins of a fort or dwelling of people unknown to the oldest inhabitants.

On the South side of Rough River rises Ben's Lick Hills. The range is divided near the middle by a small stream of water, at the mouth of which a knob rises almost perpendicularly from the water's edge to a commanding height, affording a natural fortification overlooking miles of country. This knob is surrounded on the North and West by water, the East and South opening out on a plain now covered by a forest of scrub oak. On the summit of the knob, stands the remains of this unknown building. It is composed of five rings or mounds of earth, placed at the most commanding points, forming a circle. Nothing can be seen but the low walls, now only about two feet in height. All traces of the material of which they are made has disappeared, only the rings of earth show the shape of the building, which was surely made by the hands of men. Large oaks stand upon the fallen walls, which seem to have grown from other trees, giving foundation to the theory that the builders of this work lived long before the white man possessed this country.

Nothing distinguishes this place except its commanding position. Overgrown with trees, it is hidden from careless eyes, and only the curious are rewarded after a careful search.

There is a legend of long standing that years ago the British, hoping to find some connection by water of the great lakes with the Mississippi River, sent parties of men, exploring the country, following the water courses. One of these parties went up Green River, and reaching the mouth of Rough River, divided, one continuing up Green River, the other forcing its way up Rough River, and finding trouble with the Indians, established this fort for defense and protection, until being able no longer to maintain their position, they abandoned the country or were slain by the savages.

A few years ago a man ploughing near the fort turned up a British penny, bearing the date of the year — Mr. J. W. Ford, of Hartford, has the coin in his possession. It can be seen by any one interested in the history of the country.

Either this legend is true, or the fort is the work of a people of whom we have no knowledge.

Gents—Not long since I had occasion to use your German Liver Powder for torpid liver and indigestion. It acts like a charm and sets a man's liver up all right. My wife also used it for sick and nervous headache, and it gave her great relief. I can very confidently recommend the German Liver Powder to all persons who are troubled with an inactive liver, or any bilious affection.

Balden the Prophet.
(St. Louis Republic.)
Away back in 1824 or 1825 an erratic preacher by the name of Balden made his home in Louisville, Ky. He was neither eloquent, argumentative nor persuasive, and the very memory of him would doubtless have died years ago but for the fact that he was a prophet—a prophet with honor in his own land, too. During the time when not engaged in preparing sermons or in visiting his little flock, Balden busied himself with uttering marvelous prophecies and committing them to writing. The prophet's manuscript predictions, which are now in the hands of William Miner, an aged cousin of David G. Phillips, of Louisville, are perfect gems of occult literature. They are written in a strange, crabbed hand on long note paper in old-fashioned outgilt ink, and all bear dates ranging from 1817 to 1829. He correctly outlines the Mexican War of 1846-47, giving time, cause and duration of the struggle; warns people to prepare for the great civil conflict of 1861-65, besides telling, as do the histories of to-day, the cause and results of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71. He devoted five closely written pages to the decade following 1880, predicting that in several places with the remark: "These 10 years will see the greatest destruction of life and property known in the world's history."

As a real prophet was ever known to final end of the world, Balden tried his hand and sets the date of that interesting event for 1913, and the third day of August as the exact time.

The Earth's Other Motion.
(St. Louis Republic.)
The earth, in addition to its diurnal and annual revolutions, has a slow wabbling of its axis, a motion seldom mentioned even in text-books of astronomy, and which causes our seasons to be properly likened to that imparted to a top by a touch of the finger on its rim when it is in rapid movement, the touch causing the upper end of the top's stem to describe a small circle. So, too, the mighty sun lays hold of the rim of the great terrestrial top and it begins to oscillate in the long period of 21,000 years. That is to say, on December 21, 1248, the earth made its nearest approach to the sun; and it will approach equally near in 10,999 years from that time, or on the twenty-first day of June in the year 11,748. This has all to do with climate both north and south of the equatorial line. In the period comprising the first, as Prof. C. G. Merriam so well tells us in his article "The Polar Glaciers," our Northern winters are short and mild and our summers long and sunny. But, during the period of which the year 11,748 will be the middle, our winters will be awful in their severity and our summers short and cool. Even now the Northern Hemisphere is slowly, but surely losing its long sunny summers, and, if you should live until the winter of the year 11,748-49, you could tell a story of cold and snows that would pale in insignificance the stories of the cold winters of 1833-34, for the whole Northern Hemisphere will then be in the midst of its great and terrible winter.

From deductions made in reading Prof. Merriam's valuable article, I infer that he considers glacial epochs attributable to the periodic recurrence of such a series of frigid winters.

Are You Suffering?
Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. A weak dyspeptic stomach acts slowly, or not at all, on every kind of food. Gases are extracted, acids are formed, and become a source of pain and disease until discharged. It produces Headache, Pain in the Shoulder, Tightness of the Chest, Distention, Bloating, and palpitation of the Heart. It yields invariably to the use of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Remedy, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of their merits than a lengthy advertisement. Price 25 cents a bottle. Sold by Williams, Bell & Co., Hartford.

An honest Swede tells his story in plain but unmistakable language for the benefit of the public. "One of my children took a severe cold and got the croup. I gave her a teaspoonful of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and in five minutes she gave her one more, and by this time she had to cough up the gathering in her throat. Then she went to sleep and slept good for fifteen minutes. Then she coughed up another load, and then she went back to bed and slept good for the remainder of the night. She got the croup the second night and I gave her the same remedy with the same good results. I write this because I thought there might be some one in the same need and not know the true merits of this Chamberlain's medicine."
